

Matt Durose has a Master's Degree in Criminal Justice from the University of Baltimore. He is a statistician in the Recidivism, Reentry, and Special Projects section of the U.S. Department of Justice's Bureau of Justice Statistics. During his 15 years at BJS, Matt has managed a variety of data collections, including the National Judicial Reporting Program, Police-Public Contact Survey, and the Census of Publicly Funded Forensic Crime Laboratories. He recently managed a recidivism study that used computerized criminal history records from all 50 states to examine the offending patterns of persons released from prison in 30 states during 2005.
